The standard procedure is nephrectomy and ancillary measures. The treatment concept in the modern era is individualized according to the Tumour - Node - Metastases (TNM) classification. These approaches are predefined, but are also determined on the basis of experience with the individual cases. The etiology of advanced chronic pyelonephritis can be almost identical with the initial causes of kidney inflammation. In cases of advanced chronic pyelonephritis a surgical treatment can be carried out, but is only justified on an individual basis. In the absence of metastases in the regional lymph nodes a hemi-nephrectomy can be performed. Surgical treatment of tumours of the upper third of the kidney is rarely indicated and it is recommended only when no other surgical treatment is possible or it has already been performed. In case of refractory chronic pyelonephritis (recurrent pyelonephritis, resistant vesicoureteral reflux, etc.) surgical treatment is necessary. Morphine and buprenorphine, but not naloxone, block the adenosine A2A receptor-induced response in rat trigeminal nucleus caudalis neurons. The mechanisms by which morphine and buprenorphine act on adenosine A(2A) receptors in trigeminal nucleus caudalis (TNC) neurons were studied in vitro. In whole-cell patch-clamp recordings of TNC neurons, extracellularly-applied adenosine A(2A) receptor agonist (CGS21680, 100 nM) evoked an inward current, which was blocked by the adenosine A(2A) receptor antagonist SCH58261 (100 nM). The current response was partially blocked by the N-type Ca(2+) channel blocker (ω -Aga-IVA) (0.1 μ M), the high-voltage-activated Ca(2+) channel blocker (ω -Aga-IVB) (0.1 μ M) and the L-type Ca(2+) channel blocker (DHP-I) (1 μ M), but not by the α (1)-ad
