A few years ago I had an analyst who refused to believe that the global economy had bottomed out and was predicting new highs. That was the mentality of 2001. As it turned out, the index turned into a flatline and the second worst recession since 1945. Then there was the thinking of a few days ago. At the time of the announcement, all they would say was "if you have a long position you will want to sell and if you have a short position you will want to buy". If you had longs and you had been out of the market for a long time, you would have been crushed. If you had shorts and you had been in the market for a long time, you would have been crushing longs. In the end, it was a flip of the coin. If you had bought gold and saved your gains for a long time and put it in shorts, you would have made a great profit. If you had sold your short position and moved your money to a long position, you would have been crushed. So the analyst and the trader had it wrong. But the biggest disappointment to come from the announcement was the dollar halted its rise.
