According to an ESPN.com report, Lakers forward Luol Deng had to take a week off from working out at a California-based facility to recover from Kobe Bryant's grueling off-season workout regimen. "I did a few of them with him last year," Deng told ESPN.com. "I don't know what I was thinking. It's just been crazy. But I had to take a break. I was running, shooting, lifting, working on the court and then going to his place to work out. I thought I had it all under control, but it was too much." Deng's comments are in contrast to his post-season comments last year. "I definitely feel like I'm stronger," Deng said after the Finals, when he spoke at a press conference on the Celtics' plane after the Lakers defeated Boston in six games. "I think we all feel the same way. But I think after we all stop working out, we'll probably feel the same way (about being stronger)." A team insider also told 2d92ce491b
