cAMP has no effect on the proinflammatory cytokines induced by lipopolysaccharide and peptidoglycan. Recent data suggest that bacterial and synthetic Toll-like receptor (TLR) ligands are capable of inducing biological responses in a wide variety of cells, including lymphocytes and monocytes. We evaluated whether lipopolysaccharide (LPS) and peptidoglycan (PGN) could induce the release of the immunosuppressive cytokines IL-10 and TGF-beta from mouse peritoneal macrophages and how such cytokine responses were affected by the immunosuppressive molecule 8-Cl-cAMP. Our results showed that LPS, but not PGN, was able to induce TGF-beta production by macrophages and that both TLR ligands stimulated the release of IL-10. Interestingly, 8-Cl-cAMP has no effect on the LPS- or PGN-induced release of IL-10 or 2d92ce491b
