Google Docs is a free online word processor and spreadsheet viewer. It is based on an open source project, the original code is available under the name "OpenOffice.org" and is developed by OpenOffice.org. The web application is written in Java, JavaScript, and HTML and is served using the Apache web server. Google Docs provides word processing, spreadsheet editing, presentation editing, and other features. Features can be synchronized across users' computers and mobile devices, either by using the OpenSocial web standard or via automatic synchronization using Web-based Calendars. Google Docs is optimized for use with a mouse, but has also been tested with touch devices. Google Docs is a web application which provides online word processing, spreadsheet editing, presentation editing, and other features using the Web. First released as a web-based replacement for Microsoft's Office web apps in 2008, Google Docs is open source, and available under the open source Apache License version 2. Interface: Using Google Docs you can edit and save documents, create spreadsheets, present slideshows, create web pages, and more. Document editing includes text editing, formatting and page layout, tables, and drawing tools. Spreadsheet editing includes automatic formulas, cell formatting, and table creation and manipulation. Presentations are created using slides, animation, audio, video and other features. Google Docs is compatible with Microsoft Office documents, but Google Docs may be used without installing Office on your PC. Google Docs provides automatic backups that you can access from your web browser. You can also download backups to your computer for offline editing. Backups are automatically uploaded to Google Drive. When you save a file to Google Docs, you are creating a copy on both your computer and in the cloud. You can select which file to be saved on your computer and to Google Drive, and Google Docs keeps all your changes synchronized between the two versions. If you edit a document online, it automatically gets saved to your PC when you close your browser, and vice versa. You can also sync a document to the cloud without saving it on your PC. Documents are synchronized so that they always keep their same text, formatting, and graphics. The same files can be viewed and edited in multiple
