Of all the surprises from Star Wars: The Last Jedi, the revelation that Supreme Leader Snoke (Andy Serkis) was revealed to be a former Sith Lord may have been the most far-reaching. The twist, as it were, came on the midpoint of the film when Supreme Leader Snoke speaks to Rey, making him the first non-Force user she's ever spoken to and essentially making him an adviser for all the less-developed Force users in the galaxy. That's all well and good, but could he also just be a character in the film, and not actually the mastermind behind everything that has happened so far? It's certainly a possibility, especially after The Rise of Skywalker, which will officially reveal the Sith Empire that he and Kylo Ren (Adam Driver) led, is now a few weeks away. Theories about what Snoke's intentions are in The Last Jedi have swirled around since the film premiered at Star Wars Celebration, and an unexpected development could potentially upend all of them. While debating his lack of Jedi powers, Rey asks Snoke why he left the Order, and he answers, "All was well, and I had the Force. But I grew weak and lost my focus." This is a striking statement given that in The Force Awakens, Snoke and his army of Inquisitors were so determined to take Kylo Ren's life that they essentially sliced him to death with their lightsabers, suggesting that Snoke's power and focus were not so shaky as he claimed. So how can this new statement be reconciled with his intimidating minions? Snoke seems a little out of it as he stands alongside Rey and she asks him about the future, which makes a lot of sense because The Last Jedi is almost over. But when he gets a closer look at her, he tells her that her future lies with the "dark side." If Snoke can change the future for the better, then his power must be very strong indeed, because how could he know what Rey will become? This does sound like a mission given to Kylo Ren by Snoke to start the war anew, but it may also be a clue about Snoke's ultimate goals. Perhaps he was a Sith who left the order for a reason, and that reason

Senor, I want you to read your poems to me again. You have a very strong voice, but you don't know how to use it. Your pauses are too short. You should, in this case, pause, because I have my own opinion on this matter. You should take longer breaks, but you're not interested in doing so because that's not your style. Your poems, if you read them carefully, are full of pauses, but they do not carry the thought that is embedded in them. They are empty and it's not interesting. fffad4f19a
