

By murdering a wealthy playboy, the pair - whose relationship was strained wins the admiration of the local criminal underworld. Later, Lo Bianco and Brubaker are arrested and convicted for the crime. Through legal means, they are able to achieve their freedom. They then strike a deal with mob boss Joe Vito to expose Joe Vito's black-market involvement with Fidel Castro's Cuban government, and the pair hire their own private investigators to identify the men who were supplying Castro with weapons. Over time, they become deeply embroiled with the criminal underworld, and begin to question the morality of their original crime. Cast James Franco as Charles "Chuck" Brubaker Johnny Simmons as Thomas "Tommy" Lo Bianco Liev Schreiber as Joe Vito Arturo Castro as Ricardo Jamey Sheridan as Judge John Mason Louis Gossett Jr. as Guy Vitt Robin Bartlett as Miss Cavanaugh Tom Brooke as Mark Wilson Ron McLarty as Cecil Tony Plana as Polverino (credited as "Tony Plana Sánchez") Michael Mok as Marino Brubaker Vincent DiSalvo as Charles "Chuck" Brubaker (child) Omar Montoya as Thomas "Tommy" Lo Bianco (child) Alexander Lino as Nelson Nelson Lacayo as Tommy's friend Tony Nappo as Janitor Reception Critical response In his original review for the Chicago Sun-Times, Robert Ebert said, "The title is evocative, suggesting the interrelationships that bind men together, but the movie itself doesn't play on that idea. Director John Sayles makes the movie work by giving it a dry humor that cuts through the romanticism." James Berardinelli wrote in his review for ReelViews.com that he was "pleasantly surprised by the depths of depravity that this ultra-violent gangster tale reaches". He noted that "the filmmakers have put some intelligent thought into the script" and praised the cast as the film "offers a few standout performances". On the negative side, Berardinelli said the film "never quite reaches the levels of brutality and depravity that many gangster films aspire to". The film holds a rare 100% approval rating on the review aggregator website Rotten Tomatoes based on 15 reviews, with an average rating of 7.3/10. Accolades The film won five independent
