Company product Autodesk AutoCAD 2010 - an architectural design software suite for 2D and 3D drawings. It is part of Autodesk AutoCAD 2010 family of products. The most notable features of this release are: Clarity, including a much improved point and line highlighting feature and a new text styles tool. Support for tessellation and extrusion of solids. Projection and display of technical drawings. Support for importing and editing DWG files. Connection to Google Earth and Microsoft Virtual Earth to display drawings in three dimensions and show them in context. AutoCAD Map 3D, included in AutoCAD 2010, is a map-making utility to aid in the creation of maps from CAD models. It allows the creation of 3D maps, and importing and editing of DWG/DXF files. Autodesk Toolbag is an open source AutoCAD scripting language and an extension for AutoCAD. Autodesk AutoCAD 2011 was released on September 29, 2010. It is the first major release of AutoCAD in a decade. Category:2014 softwareQ: Getting the relative position of an element in the DOM tree from the client I have a client side script which displays an element in the DOM tree using: `var el = document.getElementById("tree_view");` I need to get the relative position of the el within the current document. The `el` is itself a node in the DOM tree, which means I can get its position using:

var pos = el.parentNode.getBoundingClientRect();

However this is the position relative to the browser window, not the current document. The JavaScript has been working fine in recent months, I don't know what changed suddenly. After some research I've discovered a lot of people recommending using `var pos = el.getBoundingClientRect();` but this returns the position relative to the current document, not the document it's relative to. The same behavior can be seen in this example. How can I get the position of an element in the DOM tree relative to the current document? A: Use `window.getComputedStyle(el)`. You can also get the x and y co-ordinates if you need to. See the docs for more information. Seller:navy-pilot-

(video: 1:15 min.) Perspective tools for onscreen and plotter drawings: Use the interface of an onscreen drawing to create additional views. Draw in perspective. View perspective drawings created by other AutoCAD users. (video: 1:15 min.) User-defined drawing classes: Create your own drawing classes to organize your drawing elements and save time. Generate and edit eDrawings using drawing tools, an object picker, and eForms that you define. Define custom workflows for drawing and editing that apply to your entire drawing project. Use eForms that you define to work with the drawing layer, block selection, blocks, and components. (video: 1:15 min.) Define custom workflows that apply to your entire drawing project: Use custom workflows to streamline the drawing process. A custom workflow can define steps for when, how often, and on what conditions a command will be executed. Define conditional branching, e.g., start the same drawing process only if a certain drawing element is selected. A drawing system created with the cloud: Work with AutoCAD data on any device that has a web browser, including iOS, Windows, Mac, and Android devices. Use the cloud as a repository for your files, design reviews, and assets. Collaborate with other users on projects, share designs, and store and manage data. Receive updates to drawings and documents via the cloud. “New” graphics, shading, and visualization: New shaders that use the GPU to render geometry, color, and texture. New rendering options including shading and improved coloring that use the new shaders. New graphics options including an unlimited number of layers and layouts. New color options. A new system for visualizing object properties. You can display properties as a point cloud or a spatial distribution on your canvas. (video: 1:15 min.) Introducing the Web Editor: Work on the Web, in the cloud, or on your desktop with the Web Editor. View and edit drawing files on a web browser
