method that Zollinger used was a different process. Zollinger used a radical approach to foot care in which he would use a pumice stone or heated ceramic stone to rub the skin to create deep, healing scratches. This method also made it easy to see when the layers of the skin began to heal, providing a window into which the body could focus all of its healing energy. The modern method of foot care that we know today is largely a result of Koka's work in the 1920s and 1930s. At the time, she was already widely known for her pioneering work in the field of skin care, especially the use of soaps to clean the skin and bring it back to a soft, pliable state. Zollinger later studied the work that Koka had done, and he adapted the routine she had used to treat his own clients. Zollinger used Koka's basic method as the foundation of his own technique, which involved rubbing his hands on a brick to warm them and using a method of rubbing similar to that used on the skin to stimulate the blood flow. "He developed this kind of massage," says Dr. Frank

---

Attard, a Toronto podiatrist, "but what makes this remarkable is that you can get a good result by just rubbing your hands on the skin. You don't need a fancy massage table or special oils or creams." Since Zollinger's time, the practice of foot massage has grown into a full-fledged industry. You can use a foot rub service to treat your own feet, a service that will come to your home for your personal treatment, or you can even find an experienced foot massage therapist in a spa or retail shop. As our understanding of how the human body works has grown, so has Telnet is a popular network protocol used to create a remote access connection to an internet-connected computer. In this tutorial we will learn how to create a Telnet server in Linux and serve a simple interactive script to client connections.

Server Setup For this tutorial we will use Ubuntu 16.04

(Xenial Xerus) and a CentOS 7.4 (Citrix XenServer). We will need to install the needed packages to provide the server functionality as well as the user experience. You may want to create a separate user that you can use to log into the server. Below we will show how to create the user and install the needed packages. #Creating the test user # Ensure that the following user exists:

useradd -m -d /home/russbnig -s /bin/bash tstuser

Ensure that the following group exists:

groupadd telnet

Change the password for the user:

---

passwd tstuser # Change the password for the group: groupmod -a telnet # Ensure that the new user has access to the Telnet group: gpasswd -a tstuser telnet We will now install the required packages for the server. To simplify the install process we will combine the steps for each install. # Install the base system packages for the server: yum -y install zlib libedit net-tools openssl openssl-devel bzip2 curl bind-utils bind-tools-devel php7 php-common php-devel libmcrypt-devel gzip rpm-build ruby # Install the cyrus-imapd: yum -y install cyrus-

SASL: yum -y install cyrus-sasl-devel # Install cyrussasl2-devel: yum -y install cyrus-sasl2-devel # Install Lighttpd server: yum -y
